Towards My Discernment

1. What brings fulfillment to my heart? Does my passion bring me fulfillment?

Fulfillment comes from living with purpose, growing in my faith, excelling as a student-athlete, and making a positive impact on others. My passion for football not only brings me joy but also teaches me discipline, perseverance, and teamwork. The challenges I face in sports and academics pushes me to become better, and seeing my hard work paying off is deeply fulfilling. More importantly, using my skills to inspire and help others, whether through mentoring teammates or serving my community, gives me a sense of meaning beyond personal achievements.

2. What are my strengths and/or capabilities that I can offer for the common good?

My strengths include discipline, resilience, leadership, and a strong sense of faith. As an athlete, I can inspire others to work hard and never give up, both on and off the field. My experience in a Benedictine school and my devotion to St. John Bosco and Mary Help of Christians have taught me the value of service, so I strive to be a supportive teammate and a role model. Whether through leadership, mentoring, or simply being a good example, I aim to contribute positively to those around me.

3. How do I see myself 10 years from now? If I can talk to my future self, what are you going to say or ask?

In 10 years, I see myself as a successful professional, still deeply connected to my faith and sports. Whether continuing in athletics, coaching, or another career path, I want to be in a position where I can inspire and help others. I hope to be someone who remains disciplined, faithful, and committed to growth.

If I could talk to my future self, I'd ask:

- "Did you stay true to your values and faith despite challenges?"
- "What lessons have you learned that I should know now?"
- "Are you happy and fulfilled with where you are?"

I would also remind my future self: Keep trusting in God's plan, stay humble, and never forget where you started.
